Check Writing Activity

In class we have discussed how to read and write checks. Although many businesses take debit cards now, it is still important to be able to write checks to pay other people and organizations. In this activity, you will practice writing out checks for specific situations.

Instructions

On the back of this sheet, there are 3 blank practice checks for you to work with. For each of the situations below, write a check that would be valid for payment.

Situations

1. Your friend, John Smith, paid for your dinner when you forgot your debit card. You need to pay him back, but you don't have enough cash on hand. Write a check for $15.67 to John for paying for your dinner.

2. The neighborhood kid mows your lawn every week. You pay him $120 a month. You need to pay him for the month. His name is Billy Robertson, but his mom, Cindy, will be cashing the check for him. Write a check out to pay them for the month.

3. In the state of Utah, many of the part-time fast-food jobs require that you have a food handler permit. This permit is given out by the Utah Department of Health. Suppose that they only take a check, and that it costs $25 for the permit. Write a check out to pay them for the permit.
